You're getting married! What a wonderful thing to do. And there are many things your bride might say to you.

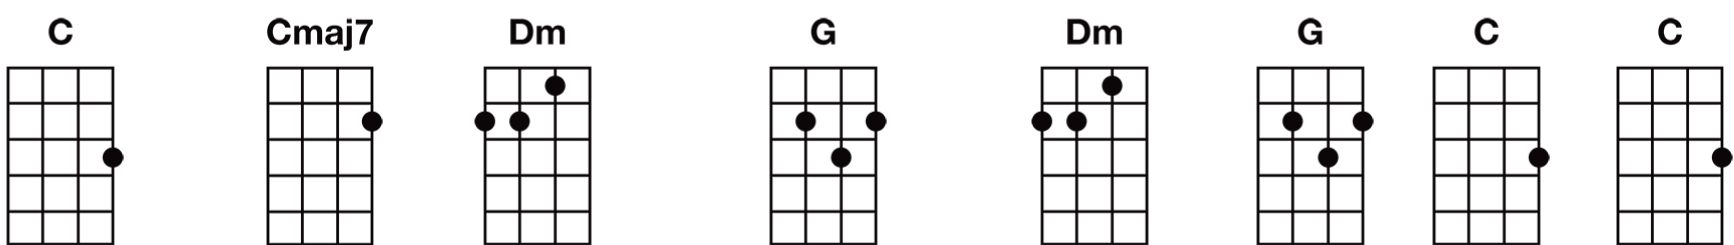

Like "I love you, my darling, each and every day," but there is one thing that you'll never hear her say:

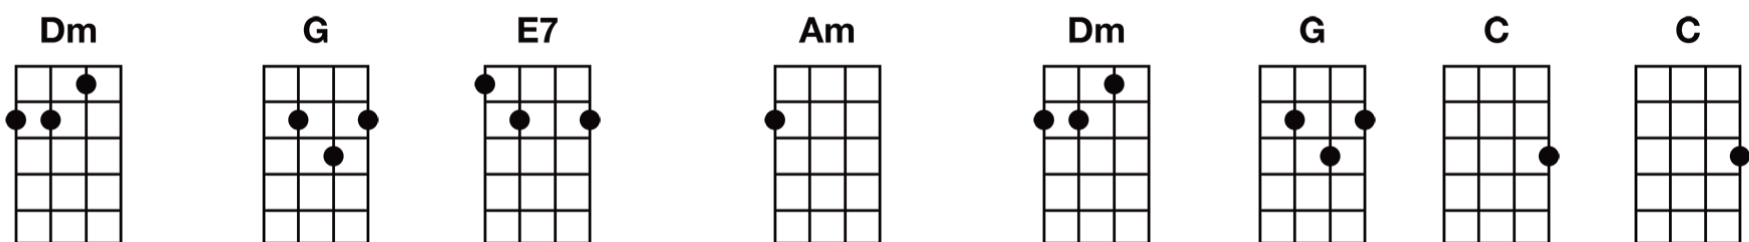

"My husband was right. My husband was right, all along. He knew something that I didn't know."

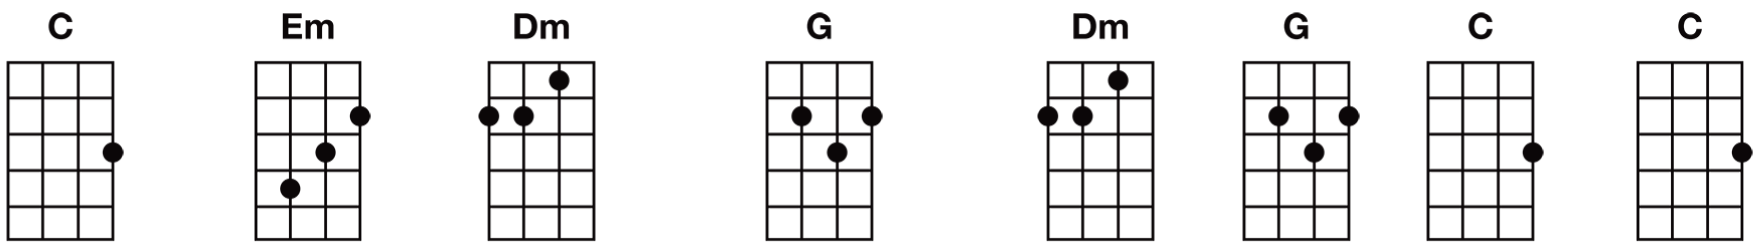

She may love you; she'll adore you, and she'll treat you like a king, but she'll never say this tiny little thing:

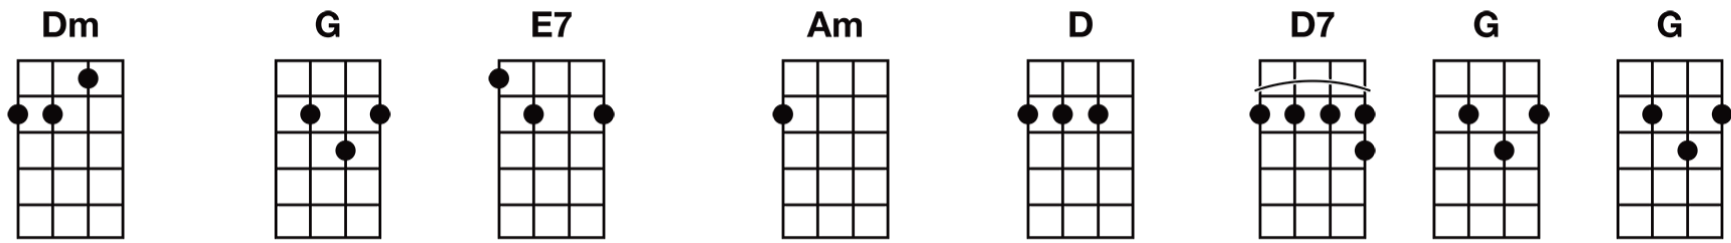

"My husband was right. My husband was right, all along. He knew something that I didn't know."

She may love you. She'll adore you, and she'll treat you like a king, but you're wrong, in everything.

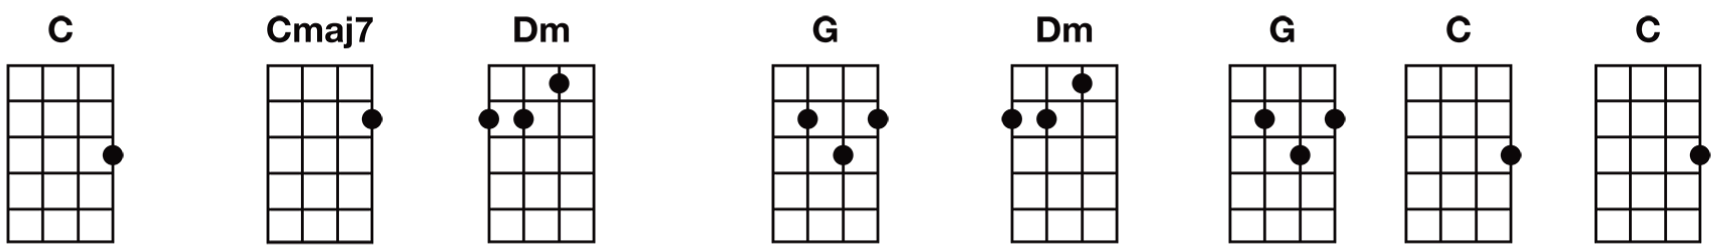

After you're married, your life will be a joy. And you'll have everything and more, you lucky boy.

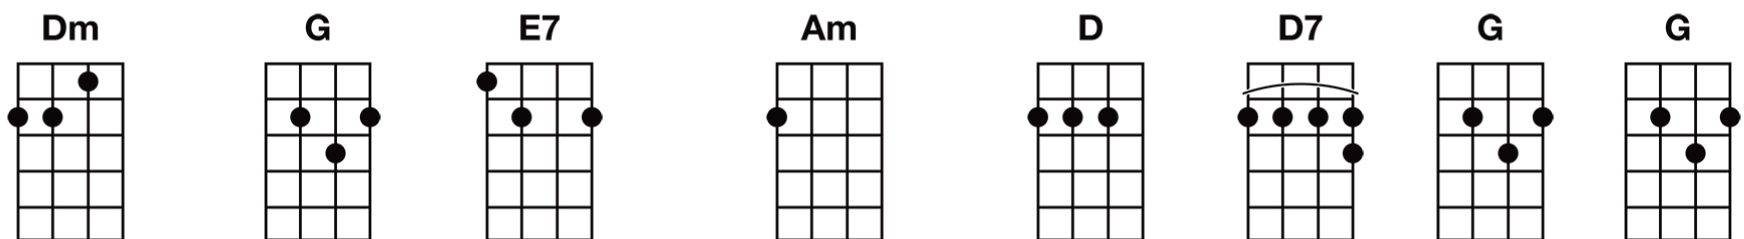

But if you ever think you're right, well, it's your tongue that you should bite, because there's one thing that you'll never hear her say:

"My husband was right. My husband was right, all along. He knew something that I didn't know."

She may love you; she'll adore you, and she'll treat you like a king, but she'll never say this tiny little thing:

"My husband was right. My husband was right, all along. He knew something that I didn't know."

She may love you. She'll adore you, and she'll treat you like a king, but you're wrong, in everything.
